RESEARCH INTERESTS

Literacy Instruction for Emergent Bilinguals

The relationship between language and the development of literacy and biliteracy is an area of research that is of interest, with specific attention given to early literacy skills for pre-school aged children. In addition, research related to the utilization of culturally relevant literature are of equal significance.

Bilingual Teacher Education

The historical foundations of bilingual teacher education programs are also a research interest. Specifically, there is an interest in researching programs that pioneered bilingual teacher education and how these programs have evolved in both purpose and in curriculum. In addition, there is an interest in examining the role that these programs play in the development of bilingual teacher ideologies and identities.

Qualitative Research

The value and benefits of using qualitative research techniques and methods in teacher education are also of intrigue. Of particular interest is the application of funds of knowledge as a means to develop understanding of different cultural groups and in the production of culturally relevant teaching practices and curriculum.
